FOREIGN LANGUAGES

ABOUT THE MAJORS:

Intensive study of a language is an integral part of a well-rounded liberal arts education. In addition to broadening students' understanding of other cultures, it allows them to develop their intellectual and creative abilities and find their place as global citizens in an increasingly inter-connected world. Studying languages provides cognitive benefits as well—sharpening problem solving abilities, developing critical thinking and writing skills and expanding the vocabulary.

Knowledge of a second language is a valuable asset. Language fluency helps students qualify for many positions, particularly when it is combined with other marketable skills in business, economics, computer science or political science.

At Transylvania, foreign language students take courses in conversation, composition, cultural history, contemporary society, literature and film. Many students participate in study abroad programs to improve language skills and experience another culture.

Transylvania offers instruction in German, French, Spanish, Chinese, Latin and ancient Greek. Students can major or minor in classics, French, German studies and Spanish.

Students can improve their foreign language skills on Transylvania's campus by living in the Language House. Residents of the house use the language they're studying in everyday conversation and host activities that expose other members of the community to traditions from around the world.
